The Power of Experience
EMC, Mass General, John Hancock, General Electric, and nearly 2,000 other employers in Massachusetts and around the world get it. So can you.

Cooperative Education at Northeastern University

For 100 years, Northeastern University’s cooperative education program has helped transform the workforce and cultivate the talent pipeline of thousands of participating businesses.

Northeastern’s renowned co-op program—among the largest and most innovative in the world—can do the same for you, providing your business with:

- talented young men and women who have the energy, drive, and passion to learn and excel in areas such as business, health care, education, engineering and technology, media and the arts, and public policy
- a pipeline to potential employees who are committed, professional, and prepared for leadership
- cost-effective ways to meet your human resource needs
- six-month co-op assignments for students to spend more time working, not just training
- a more flexible work environment, allowing full-time employees to take on special projects or top-priority work

To learn more about the power of co-op and how it can transform your business, contact the Office of Cooperative Education Services, where one of the following individuals will be happy to help you:

Jim Boyle, Director of Employer Relations 617-373-3772
j.boyle@neu.edu

Christine Hathaway, Asst. Director, Employer Relations 617-373-2309
c.hathaway@neu.edu

Northeastern University